

Investors are yanking money out of global stocks at levels not seen since the 2008 financial crisis

- Investors pulled $12.4 billion from global stock-focused funds in June, the highest level since October 2008 amid the worst of the financial crisis.
- A slowing global economy is spooking some investors as are fears of a trade war.